A Sunday Newspaper That Washington Likes

Washington approves of a clean, sane Sunday newspaper-a compress ed newspaper-devoid of sensationalism and catch-penny devices, but fuil of live news and good, wholesome reading fit for the home. This fact is attested by the cordiality with which the Sunday edition of The Washington Herald is received. Its circulation, it is true, is not yet as large, by a few thousand, as that of its daily issues, but it is a gilt-edged circulation that will expand as the high character of the paper becomes more widely understood.

Commendation of yesterday's bright edition came from all quarters. "Just the sort of Sunday newspaper we want," was the expression frequently heard. Washingtonians like it because it is so different; so unlike other Sunday papers in make-up, in general appearance, in size, and, more especially, in contents. The difference will be emphasized with each succeeding Sanday issue. The Herald is appealing to and building up a clientele of its own-a clientele that seeks something different.

There have been but two of the Sunday issues of The Herald. Watch for the third. It will still be different and bear even closer analysis, because it-will be better than its popular predecessors.

The Herald is endeavoring to correct the practice of some news agents of charging five cents for its Sunday paper. The price is THREE CENTS. The fact that it is worth more does not excuse the imposition

The Washington Herald is only two weeks old-two weeks old to-day. No new newspaper anywhere ever made mere substantial headway in a fortnight. And The Herald has only begun to grow,
